Before ramen properly entered the nation's consciousness, Cocoro was one of the few places Japanese diners could go for a bowl of their favourite noodles, and it's often still packed with salarymen who order their usual. Often thought of as pricey, as befitting its address off Bond Street, the lunch sets are in fact extremely good value — £13 or so brings ramen plus 3 kinds of appetiser, miso soup, rice, and fruit. This may seem like overkill but it's in fact quite a Japanese thing — where noodles will often come with rice, an orgy of double carbs. For real indulgence, try the Seabura spicy miso ramen set: it comes with extra pork fat.
